Trial had moments

Amid droning arguments of impeachment, some statements and incidents made an impression

The historic impeachment trial of President Donald Trump formally began on a Thursday in January, when Chief Justice John Roberts was sworn in to preside over the affair.

The trial has produced many hours of arguments but also some memorable moments.

In the first-day rule-setting session, tempers flared in the wee hours. House impeachment manager Jerrold Nadler said senators who voted against having witnesses would be part of a cover-up, prompting White House counsel Pat Cipollone to say Nadler owed "an apology to the American people."

And a speech by House impeachment manager Adam Schiff, in which he asserted that "right matters and the truth matters," quickly went viral.

"Okay, here we go," says Mellencamp, guitar in hand as he kicks off the ad tweeted by both the musician and Bloomberg on Wednesday.

"No one knows Small Town America like Indiana's @johnmellencamp," Bloomberg said in the tweet.

Mellencamp was born in Seymour.
